Now which, when a breath of fresh air or a bit of of these figures is true Republicanam vertices is most grateful. Parks are a benefaction in which all classes share proportion as nearly equal as possible. They give to the poor opportunities to escape from narrow and uncomfortable lodgings to find relief and enjoyment from refreshing breezes and the eight of trees and verdure and flowers. They marry the country to the fown, and per-mit the tired denices of the city to renew their acquaintance with nature. By rendering the city more attractive they raise the price of property and thereby more than recompenses the attracting population and visitors they are advantageous to business. In respect to health they are particularly sensicial and are a most important factor in reducing the ratio of mortality. They afford delightful places of resort for all in hours of leisure. There is no interest that will not feel the favorable project of this sort.
